

New Novel Urges Single Women to Just Say No to Married Men

Author reveals the dark side of giving in to forbidden desires

CHICAGO, IL – April 20 (SEND2PRESS NEWSWIRE) – Autumn Girl Press announced today a new book “Single Black Female,” a cautionary romance, by Carrie Carr. It’s been almost two decades since “Fatal Attraction” sent a quiver down every married man’s spine by dramatically illustrating the consequences of a one-night stand. However, it’s not just married men who should be concerned, but the women they are fooling around with as well.

“Single Black Female,” a cautionary romance by Carrie Carr will remind readers of the consequences of dating married men. The author nails the message by painting a nightmarish tale of infidelity, but this time, it’s the mistress that suffers the repercussions, not the married man. The author attempts to answer the question every woman wants to know. “What does it take to keep a man monogamous?” Readers will be intrigued with her findings.

According to a recent survey, only 14% of married men actually leave their wives for their mistress, which should make the endeavor less appealing to the single women on the prowl. Though choices may be limited for the single woman in search of that special man, the author encourages women to rethink their decision before settling for a married man. And although "Single Black Female" is not nearly as dark as "Fatal Attraction," the message is the same – stay clear of married men.

"Single Black Female" will enlighten women about the male psyche, provide hope to the single woman in search of romance and inspire women to love and value themselves.
