

InteractiveVoices: A Web 2.0 Application for Finding and Hiring Voice-Overs

InteractiveVoices.com recently unveiled their new Web 2.0 web service that makes it easy for business people to search for, audition and hire professional voice-over talents for audio and video productions.

TORONTO, Ontario (SEND2PRESS NEWSWIRE) – InteractiveVoices (<http://www.InteractiveVoices.com>), the voice-over marketplace, has just rolled out a new Web 2.0 platform for businesses that need to hire voice-over talents. Principles that render InteractiveVoices a Web 2.0 company include the continued focus on a rich user experience by working with technologies such as RSS, CSS and AJAX while using the Web as a software platform.

New

additions to the site include RSS feeds that allow individuals to subscribe to the IV Blog, the InteractiveVoices Podcast (also available in the iTunes Music Store), manage voice-over projects, collaborate with colleagues online, use file delivery tools, and implement feedback for other InteractiveVoices members regarding a relationship forged through business conducted at the website or endorsements based upon the quality of the talent's voice-over demo and qualifications.

Whether a company needs voice-overs for television, radio, podcasts, trade shows, or in-store advertising, they can find exactly what they need for a price that they can afford at www.InteractiveVoices.com.

Finding the perfect voice at InteractiveVoices can be achieved in three simple steps:

- 1. Signup for Free*
- 2. Post a Job*
- 3. Get Responses*

Interactive Voices CEO, David Ciccarelli says, "Our mission is to make hiring a voice talent the easiest and most enjoyable part of completing a business person's multimedia project. When they post their voice-over job with us, our entire team works hard to ensure that their overall Web experience at InteractiveVoices is unparalleled with superior end results."
