At an age when many look forward to retirement, Linq is kicking it up, cranking it out, and defying stereotypes. Linq's second album "Fast Moving Dream" is a hopeful folk-pop-rock celebration appealing to Woodstock originals and their children, soul-searching idealists, and anyone bored with the doom-and-gloom that passes for art in much of today's pop culture.

Fast Moving Dream is an electric folk and rebellion rock celebration appealing to Woodstock originals and their children, soul-searching idealists, and anyone frustrated with the current state of the world. This project, produced by June Millington, includes songs about war victims, health care, homophobia, longing for love, celebration, and a tribute to a longtime friend who died too young.

Fast Moving Dream resonates with life experience without resorting to trite and tired images. Linq states about her songs on Fast Moving Dream "It's not that my themes aren't tense, raw, or edgy. They are. You just don't feel like giving up, that's all."
