These consumers know that the chairs in the stores now were bought last year, when the price of raw materials was low. Those prices are all going up next year because the price of oil continues to increase.

Resin furniture is always a bargain. It doesn't need to be painted, it doesn't crack or split like wood, and it doesn't rust and oxidize like metal. And, it's 100% recyclable.

For the rest of this summer, resin furniture will be cheaper than it will ever be again. Taking advantage of this, people are stocking up for next year. It is the most intelligent thing to do, says Adams Mfg. As a result, resin furniture is moving out of the stores faster than ever before.

According to the company, “If you see it, and you think you'll need it, buy it now, while it's cheaper." Alert consumers know a bargain when they see one.
