

Alameda Teacher Discusses Egypt on PBS NewsHour

ALAMEDA, Calif., Feb. 11 (SEND2PRESS NEWSWIRE) – Nea Community Learning Center teacher David Maduli is among a nationwide group of educators chosen by PBS NewsHour to participate in a live online discussion exploring recent political events in Egypt. The discussion, which will take place Tuesday, February 15 at 2 p.m. ET (11 a.m. PT), will be moderated by PBS NewsHour correspondent Hari Sreenivasan and will add context and background for educators and students, as well as provide voices from the region, media resources and lesson plans for the classroom.

NewsHour has partnered with Independent Television Service (ITVS) to pull together unique perspectives on the situation in Egypt, and this discussion is one of several approaches PBS is taking to offer diverse insights into developing events in Egypt.

About Nea Community Learning Center and David Maduli:

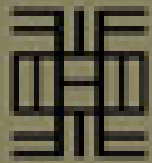

The Nea Community Learning Center (NCLC) is a top-ranked public charter school serving grades K-12. Modeled on the highly successful Alameda Community Learning Center, Nea offers project-based, self-directed learning in an innovative, technology-rich environment.
