Base Camp is located on the Southeast Ridge of Mount Everest at 17,600 feet (5,380 meters) and is the beginning point for climbers looking to complete their lives upon reaching the summit.

Based on the unforgiving nature of the gargantuan pinnacle layered in glistening snow, Mount Everest stands as the highest elevation on Earth measuring at 29,029 feet (8,848 meters) and swindles the souls of experienced mountaineers with the dream of scaling the freezing range each season. Following the successful launch of "Regulus" into space during June of this year, which happens to be the most extreme locale known to humankind, Ozee decided to dispatch printed copies of his written masterpiece to regions equipped with lethal determination.

“Reaching for the stars was the challenge of a lifetime. With several failures along the way, the promise of sending ‘Regulus’ into space withered following each attempt. But, considering the vacuum of space has now graced my creation with bewildering muse, it came time for my child to witness the rest of the world,” said Ozee during his announcement of reaching Mount Everest.

Aside from coordinating photoshoots with “Regulus” depicted alongside Mount Everest, it is the First Children’s Book On Mount Everest, the First American Children’s Book On Mount Everest and the First Self-Published Book On Mount Everest. Ozee has expressed his sincere gratitude to each tourist operation in Kathmandu, Nepal that allocated resources to ensuring the results of the mission were favorable (Mosaic Adventure, Amigo Trekking, and Himalayan Wonders). Seeing “Regulus” claim five new world records within two months, the global community of publishers, readers, and writers are enduring the pain of waiting to see where the celebrated story goes next.
