The American Society of Legal Advocates is an elite group of trial attorneys comprised from the most experienced and successful lawyers around the nation. Only attorneys that have a long-term proven record of professional success and high ethical standards are considered for membership. In addition to the highest professional standards, candidates for membership must also have a record of long-term commitment to their community and justice system.

Founded to bring together the nation's best trial attorneys with the public, it is the goal of The American Society of Legal Advocates to provide a source of the highest caliber of legal advocates. Additionally, The American Society of Legal Advocates aims to strengthen professional relationships between attorneys and promote best practices throughout the legal community.

Attorney Bernard Walsh offered this comment about becoming a member, "It's been an honor to be accepted into a group such as the ASLA five times. Over the years working as a personal injury attorney, I have seen an increased effort by the insurance industry to undermine consumer protections by lobbying state legislatures in Florida and beyond. As such it is essential that members of the civil legal community come together to defend the rights of citizens and promote a strong legal system.

"Organizations such as ASLA help by bringing professionals together and facilitate discussion and awareness. I look forward to another year of fighting to protect the rights of Floridians alongside members of ASLA."
