“There is nowhere else like Harlem,” said Mr. David Miscavige, ecclesiastical leader of the Scientology religion, when he dedicated the new Church and community center on July 31, 2016. “Your renaissance poets, your playwrights, your painters, your authors and musicians—even a mere recitation of the names is humbling: Duke Ellington, Cab Calloway, Billie Holiday, Claude McKay and Louis Armstrong. What else need one say except ‘excise Harlem from American history and everything turns lukewarm.’”

The staff and parishioners of the Church are equally passionate about Harlem and work each day to strengthen the vibrant community.

“Harlem is the capital of Black America,” says Phil, a staff member at the Church. “We are brothers and sisters in Harlem. It’s a very, very proud community. We have this vibe, this kind of swagger.” Phil loves that “families can come, artists can come, they can get together and create a better community.”

But Harlem also moves to a Latin beat says Sashianna, who describes how “growing up in Harlem is one of the best experiences you can have because you see what a real community is like. We have so much culture, we have so much art. I like to call it ‘we have our own sazón’...our own type of flavor and our own seasoning to whatever we do.”
