“Gaviidae Commons represents the best location in downtown Minneapolis,” said Jack Friedler. “In addition to a robust downtown office market, as living habits change, Millennials are migrating from suburban America to urban America. Downtown Minneapolis is flourishing.”

Friedler added, “In today’s shrinking retail environment retailers need to be in the best locations to succeed. The development of the old Dayton’s building and revitalization of Nicollet Mall is just the beginning of a continually growing downtown.”

The building is connected to the Wells Fargo Center and to the IDS and RBC buildings via the skyway system. This system provides convenient year-round access to the retail and convenience services offered in the newly acquired property.
