LendingQB Named a Top 50 Technology Service Provider for First Time

COSTA MESA, Calif., April 26, 2013 (SEND2PRESS NEWSWIRE) — LendingQB, a provider of end-to-end loan origination software, announced that it has been designated to Mortgage Technology magazine's Top 50 Service provider's list for the first time. The company attributes the value that its new loan origination system (LOS) is delivering to lending organizations as a key reason it made this year's list.

According to the magazine, in order to make the list, companies must excel in four primary criteria: drive the continued advancement of technology and services; provide a viable revenue model and value proposition to clients; offer exceptional customer service; and have a unique impact on the mortgage industry.

LendingQB's LOS platform is comprised of retail, wholesale and consumer direct point-of-sale Web portals for all lending channels; a product and pricing engine; proprietary AUS; loan processing; electronic documents, closing; secondary marketing; and interim servicing. The solution is proven to seamlessly connect workflows, eliminate manual touch points and optimize operational performance.

LendingQB's clients report that they have realized a dramatic increase in employee productivity, a decrease in technology maintenance costs, and a reduction in the cost to originate loans. From a support standpoint, LendingQB does the heavy lifting during implementations for clients by configuring the entire LOS for them, whereas many vendors place the onus on the lender.

"Since our official launch of the platform at the end of 2011 we have experienced rapid adoption by lenders looking to upgrade their older LOSs with a solution that is truly browser-based with no software whatsoever to install," said Binh Dang, president of LendingQB. "We're elated that Mortgage Technology magazine has recognized the immense value we deliver to our clients."
