

NotaryCam Applauds Treasury Recommendations to Remove Barriers to Remote Online Notarization and ‘Fully Digital Mortgage’

NEWPORT BEACH, Calif., Aug. 2, 2018 (SEND2PRESS NEWSWIRE) – Rick Triola, founder and CEO of the industry’s most popular remote online notarization solution, NotaryCam, calls the Department of Treasury’s recommendations in its July 31 report to the President: A Financial System That Creates Economic Opportunities: Nonbank Financials, Fintech, and Innovation “a cure to the persistent drags on real estate transactions that have prevented the consumer from experiencing the benefits now possible with digital technologies.”

Specifically Triola cites the positive impact of recommendations in the report’s section Electronic Closing and Recording (p. 107 – 110), in advancing the industry’s adoption of remote online notarization:

Treasury recommends that states yet to authorize electronic and remote online notarization pursue legislation to explicitly permit the application of this technology and the interstate recognition of remotely notarized documents.

Treasury recommends that states align laws and regulations to further standardize notarization practices. Treasury further recommends that Congress consider legislation to provide a minimum uniform national standard for electronic and remote online notarizations. Such legislation would facilitate, but not require, this component of a fully digital mortgage process and would provide a greater degree of legal certainty across the country.

“The key phrase here is ‘legal certainty,’ which, if achieved, knocks down any barriers for a lender or a title company or other industry participant to offer the convenience and security of doing these transactions online,” Triola said. “Consumers are asking for this. Consumers are tech savvy and they want the convenience of tech-enabled financial transactions.”

“In my opinion, the biggest problem with technology innovation in our industry is that it never gets to the end user because so many barriers to adoption are created. Consumers don’t even know the technology exists to allow remote online notarization that they can complete from anywhere, at any time. This option should be available to any consumer who wants it.

“It allows the lenders and the title companies to move forward and to offer this convenience to all stakeholders including the end user. And that’s exciting,” he said.

Triola also sees promise for the industry’s drive to a more fully digital mortgage transaction, citing the following from the report:

“Getting to a full complete electronic real estate mortgage transaction has been an achievable goal for years, but the laws were not on the books that allowed for this to happen,” Triola said.

While the Treasury’s recommendations are a great and necessary start, encouraging all states to get on board, Triola thinks national legislation will be needed.

“What is needed is to give title underwriters, lenders, and investors comfort that the e-transaction is not going to be challenged by a foreclosure judge or a bankruptcy judge. Those concerns hang out there now because there’s no case law to solidify support for the current legislation in Virginia or Montana, for example.

“Obviously,” Triola said, “they had extensive conversations with MBA and ALTA to understand the barriers for adoption and they’ve addressed them, so it’s very exciting.”
