“Our practice is focused on the patients and their needs first and foremost. We want the patients to drive the conversation and we’re here to offer solutions and quality care – on their terms.”

To date, Dr. Czernik has dedicated 10 years to working in academic medicine, teaching dermatology residents and working on clinical trials to advance treatments in complex medical and laser dermatology. She plans to continue her involvement with academia and will now combine those skills to treat patients at DermMedical and present an advanced curriculum to physician assistant (PA) students at Sacred Heart University. She hopes to broaden the availability of expert patient-centered dermatology care in the area.

“Teaching the latest dermatological techniques is very rewarding, but continued involvement in academia also keeps me involved in research and clinical trials which keep me abreast of the latest developments in dermatology and enable me to participate in developing new and improved forms of treatment,” she says. “More and more PAs are going into the dermatology field and there are no residencies available to them to provide a real-life experience. We’re working to fill that gap.”
