

Recovery Blogger Kelly Fitzgerald Junco Sells Memoir About Her Adventures as The ‘Sober Seniorita’

LOS ANGELES, Calif., July 18, 2018 (SEND2PRESS NEWSWIRE) – Passageway Press, a boutique publisher based in the U.K., has acquired recovery blogger Kelly Fitzgerald Junco’s memoir, which recounts her journey from party chica to sober seniorita – moving from suburban Pennsylvania to the tourist city of Cancun, Mexico and then succumbing to alcohol and cocaine addiction.

What started as an innocent adventure abroad quickly turned into a hopeless and desperate attempt of a 20-something girl to normalize the destructive behavioral patterns that turned into the cycle of her life.

After finding sobriety, Kelly launched “The Adventures of a Sober Seniorita” blog, where she wrote a post about reaching a year of sobriety. The story went viral via the Huffington Post and was translated into five languages.

Junco wrote the proposal for “From Party Chica to Sober Seniorita: Getting Sober in Mexic” after completing the All the Write Moves coaching program.

“It feels completely overwhelming and simultaneously amazing, to put my life stories into a book,” Junco says. “When I still drank, I used to joke around and say one day I will write a book about my crazy life, and it’s absolutely surreal that’s what’s actually happening.”
