Now in its fifth year, HousingWire's Rising Stars™ award program recognizes housing economy professionals under 40 who have proven themselves as leaders and innovators. Honorees come from every space in the mortgage sector and are chosen by HousingWire editors for demonstrated excellence and for driving markets forward in their respective fields.

"Jason's unique perspective enables him to diagnose industry challenges and develop innovative solutions that impact the way the industry thinks about HECM lending," said John Button, president and CEO of ReverseVision. "He has demonstrated tremendous leadership in charting the course of ReverseVision's product development. His recognition as a HousingWire Rising Star is well deserved."

The list of Price's technological contributions to ReverseVision and HECM technology is long. Most notably, Price innovated a calculator tool for RV Sales Accelerator (RVSA) that allows lenders to visually model the financial impact of HECMs on the retirement portfolios of well-funded borrowers. The 'show, don't tell' approach embodied by the calculator tool has been a major turning point in the industry-wide effort to shift perceptions of the HECM loan from a needs-based product to a wealth management solution.

"This year's class of Rising Stars represents the best in young leadership within the mortgage finance arena," said Caroline Basile, HousingWire's online editor and member of the selection committee. "I'm impressed by the achievements of this year's winners and look forward to seeing what each of them accomplishes in the mortgage and housing finance economy in the future."

Price is profiled in the June issue of HousingWire magazine. To view the full list of 2018 HW Rising Stars™ honorees, visit <https://www.housingwire.com/articles/43468-housingwires-class-of-2018-rising-stars/>.
