Thomas earned this designation after completing an intensive program that measures her artistic and technical competence. Professional Photographers of America currently recognizes fewer than 2,500 CPPs across the nation.

“Although I’ve been a professional photographer for a few years now, and was a hobbyist for 40 years prior to that, getting my industry certification is a special honor. It means that my technical and creative capabilities meet the industry’s high level of professional standards,” says Thomas. “This is not dissimilar to nurses, CPAs, engineers, and other professionals obtaining certification in their industries.”

Thomas pointed out, “Helping my business customers portray the best of themselves and what they do is my passion. The work I went through to achieve this certification helps me to do that even better.”

Professional Photographers of America (PPA.com/PPP) is the leading body for certifying imaging professionals. PPPs must complete a written examination, finish an image evaluation, and adhere to a strict code of conduct. Certification must be renewed on a periodic basis, ensuring continued confidence in the professionalism of Certified Professional Photographers. For more information on certification, visit PPA.com/PPP.
