With all the reopening uncertainty looming over most of the school districts across the U.S., parents are now embracing alternative and innovative online learning pods, microschooled, and homeschooling to help with their children's academic growth.

Talentnook curriculum support and homeschooling program offers hundreds of courses to supplement students in pre-K through high school. A combination of personalized guidance and adaptive teaching methods by subject matter experts has been the distinctive factor for Talentnook in the fast-growing education niche sector.

Talentnook programs follow the school's curriculum for public school students and the curriculum of choice for the homeschoolers offering a flexible learning schedule, and highly experienced elementary, middle, and high school educators that are ready to supplement and guide the learning needs of assigned students.

The personalized programs are designed by educational experts and their team of tutors to offer individual instruction as well as group sessions for enhanced learning.

With over 6 million students off school for the foreseeable future in California alone, parents have been struggling with juggling childcare, homeschooling, and their own workloads. Talentnook teachers aim to ease the burden from parents by taking on some of the academic stress by helping students progress with the curriculum, ensuring that concepts are understood, and homework is accurately completed over the next few weeks and months.

“We’re really working to fit the needs of the family as well as make the whole online learning experience fun and wholesome for students. Our learning programs’ overall goal is not just to provide tutors, but to mentor young learners for holistic growth and help them pave a career path,” said Sumit Kumar, co-founder of Talentnook.
