By taking an individualized approach to the training process, Tony can provide individualized assistance to women in the early stages of their consulting careers. This can result in faster growth and a more effective approach to acquiring clients, growing their businesses and generating profits in this highly competitive sector of the economy.

Tony has long been a champion of women in the marketing field, stating, “In my experience over the years, women achieve success in consulting more quickly because they tend to take calculated risks in their business dealings.” This measured approach can be a powerful tool for women in reaching their target audience and making a connection with potential clients.

The new initiative will deliver practical help for women interested in starting their own consulting businesses. By drawing on the knowledge derived from Tony's years of experience and his proven expertise in the marketing industry, the program will offer actionable information for participants in the program to foster a hands-on approach to the entrepreneurial experience.

This pragmatic approach to marketing has allowed Tony Shap to achieve remarkable success. With multiple appearances on the Inc. 500 list of fastest-growing companies and an established reputation for innovation and growth in the competitive marketplace, Tony has proven himself a solid performer as a consultant, chief marketing officer and chief revenue officer for numerous companies across the U.S.

Tony's inspiration for the new initiative comes from his own family. "I had a real 'aha' moment on the day that my 14-year-old daughter opened up her first account at Chase. I was so proud to have the opportunity to talk about finances with her, and to discuss her future as a successful entrepreneur in her own right. That was the moment I knew I had to take a stand for women in our industry."
