While consulting with TMS for the last two years, Ozenghar also operated an independent mortgage advisory firm. Previously, she served more than a decade as vice president of correspondent lending for AgFirst Farm Credit Bank, where she was responsible for its correspondent division's operations, secondary marketing, underwriting, and servicing. Prior to that, she was vice president secondary marketing at Second National Bank of Warren, and secondary marketing manager at Signal Bank N.A.

“Beth Ozenghar’s depth of mortgage expertise, as well as her consultative temperament, makes her ideal to serve as president and COO of TMS, both for operating our business and serving our treasured clients,” said David Lykken. “In this era of unprecedented industry disruption and opportunity, mortgage lenders need experienced guidance from a trusted advisor like never before, and with Beth serving as president, TMS is ideally positioned to deliver on that need.”

“I am thrilled with the opportunity to make a lasting difference in our industry as president and COO of Transformational Mortgage Solutions,” said Beth Ozenghar. “David Lykken has built TMS into an amazing organization that helps mortgage businesses reach their highest potential by focusing on process improvement, people and profitability. Understandably, earning his trust and confidence has been no small accomplishment.”

TMS consulting services focus on helping lenders improve processes to increase loan originations by performing operational “health checks” and executing efficiency assessments that help its clients fund more loans compliantly and accurately with the least amount of friction, and in the least amount of time. Specifically, lenders turn to TMS for services related to agency approval, warehouse line review/audits, policy and procedure assessment and creation.

Its executive coaching services’ key objective is to increase net bottom-line earnings by creating a collaborative, cohesive, and consistent corporate culture in an environment where all employees feel valued, empowered, and become actively involved increasing the company’s success.

Its communication services help its clients determine an ideal communications strategy by identifying, defining, and articulating their core go-to-market message, then help effectively, affordably, and efficiently communicate that message to their target audience.
