Enright was recognized for his initiative in improving Vice Capital Markets processes and procedures around client communication. When the government-sponsored enterprises (GSEs) announced changes regarding second homes and non-owner-occupied properties last year, Enright created and implemented a direct communication channel with clients to assist them in navigating the required restrictions and limited allowable percentage of deliviers. This helped Vice Capital's clients optimize their available loans eligible for sale and stay compliant with GSEs changes and requirements. In addition,

Enright's efforts in evaluating and improving fallout assumptions have increased the performance and profitability of all Vice Capital clients despite the volatility of last year's market.

"Danny has grown professionally and personally by leaps and bounds in the past year. Not only did he complete his MBA, but his ability to speak directly and communicate effectively with all levels of the clients' senior management has made him a valuable asset," said Vice Capital Markets President Troy Baars. "It's rare to find someone that understands the technical side of hedging and can also communicate in a way anyone can understand, which speaks to a maturity and industry understanding well beyond his years of experience. We're extremely proud of him and look forward to seeing what he accomplishes in the coming year."
